

How to Play VICTO

One person is selected to "call" the game. Caller need not play unless group is very small.

Each player selects one board to be placed in front of him. Caller takes 75 small slogans or loose squares, turning them face down on a flat surface, or places them in a bowl, top level of which is above eye level of caller or players.

Each player places a few of the small, round markers beside his board. Caller mixes up small squares thoroughly, so that neither he nor any player knows location of any particular slogan.

Caller then draws slogans from table or bowl one at a time and reads them aloud to the players. For example, first slogan drawn he reads: "Under V, 'Don't Fire Till You See the Whites of Their Eyes.'" All players on whose board this slogan appears place a small, round marker in the square over this slogan, and caller places this slogan on master sheet in proper place. Caller then draws and reads next slogan. Players having this slogan also cover with round marker. This continues until one player has 5 markers in a straight row on same board. First player to get 5 markers in a straight row shouts "VICTO," and is the winner.

Before any prize is awarded, however, winning player calls back to caller the 5 slogans in the winning row, and caller checks each slogan against the master sheet to eliminate the possibility of a marker being placed on a slogan in error.

All boards are then cleared of markers, all slogans removed from the master sheet and replaced in with the balance of the slogans, call slogans are remixed, and the new game is started same as above. Remember that the V in the center of your card is a free play and you may place a marker on this square at any time.

Attention, Caller: Slogans on master sheet arranged alphabetically.
